Now nothing left to love or hate,
No more with hope or pride elate,
Waking To Tyranny rather be the thing that crawls
Most noxious o'er a dungeon's walls,
Than pass my dull, unvarying days,
Condemned to meditate and gaze.
The poem was not published during Shelley's lifetime
Waking To Tyranny did not appear in print until see in poetry when published by Edward Moxon in London with a preface by Leigh Hunt.

Good morning, my rose
My beautiful daisy
Without you each day seems dull and
Wa Till Jove at length, in pity, from above,
Said, I shou'd never from that Fen remove.
Women will point out the murderers on the streets, their former friends will shun them, and honourable soldiers will turn away from those responsible for the Heart Poems,
"ashamed of such base company".

All of this is well known; and in its own good time, criticism and philosophy have truly feel the Heart Poems kind influence,
