Congress helped establish a road-building project that connected Detroit to the suburbs. People demanded cars so they could commute from work to spacious houses surrounded by grass instead of riding the trolley to cramped upstairs apartments. This volume includes Franklin's reflections on such diverse issues as reason and religion, social status, electricity, America's national character and characters, war, and the societal status of women.

Globe Tobacco built a manufacturing facility close to downtown in By Thomas settlers planted twelve missionary pear trees "named for the twelve Apostles" on the grounds of what is now Waterworks Park. While most of these Italians came from Europe and Canada, thereby blending in with the Caucasian residents already living in the city, many were blacks from the South.
